Information Convergence: At the Boundaries of Access

The John Marshall Law School | Room 1200
315 S. Plymouth Court | Chicago, Illinois

Traditional distinctions between intellectual property, information, privacy and property rights are converging and changing the way the law applies in virtually every aspect of life. Lawyers today face such tough questions as:

Does the law still protect information in the Digital Information Age?

Should information be free for the taking?

Where does information end and intellectual property begin?

These questions and more will be explored by practitioners, academics and information and technology specialists in a day-long conference November 9, 2007 at The John Marshall Law School's Center for Information Technology and Privacy Law.
